The Soviet and Post-Soviet Review is a peer-reviewed journal, which primarily focuses on the social history of modern Russia. It publishes articles based on documents previously not available from Russian archives.

In the 20th century, Russia survived revolutions and wars, atrocious social experiments, terror, and the disintegration of the communist empire. This journal is dedicated to revealing how people lived under such conditions, how they protected themselves, how they coped with state power, and what their expectations are for the future.

The journal welcomes articles on history and historiography. Each issue includes articles, essays and book reviews.

Vladimir P. Buldakov (1944) (Ph.D. Moscow State University). He currently works in the Institute of Russian History (Russian Academy of Sciences).
